Why is it...

...that anyone in their right mind would want to know more about Madonna? Working on the assumption that many of us are not, in fact, in our right minds, St. Martin's Press has published Encyclopedia Madonnica—a comprehensive guide to the world of the multimedia material girl. The author, Matthew Rettenmund, is a self-confessed Madonnaholic. We've heard of 12-step programs for that kind of thing.

...that somebody in Hollywood didn't think of this gender-bending premise sooner? In Dr. Jekyll & Ms. Hyde, Tim Daly (escaping temporarily from the comedy hell of Wings) plays a scientist who drinks a chemical cocktail and turns into a maniacal femme fatale—played by Catwoman manqué Sean Young. Is that what they call typecasting? Harvey Fierstein also stars.

Bo Knows

Call it the Rob Lowe maneuver: actor gets much-needed career boost by playing villain in hit comedy opposite Saturday Night Live stars. It worked for Rob in Wayne's World; now, Bo Derek is going for a Lowe, with SNLers Chris Farley and David Spade in Tommy Boy, from Paramount. (Oddly enough, Rob's on hand for this one, too.) Best remembered as the bodacious beauty pursued by Dudley Moore in that quintessential '70s jigglefest, 10, Bo's been busy lately making films in Europe. So naturally we jumped at the chance to ask her a few burning questions.

You're in fantastic shape. Have you ever tried the Joan Collins or Jane Fonda workouts? I'm probably about the only person in North America who hasn't.

What's your place in California like? I've lived here 14 years, in a valley close to the ocean—near Ronald Reagan and Michael Jackson.

Are you bothered by people's impressions of you? There's so much emphasis put on exteriors. People should get into doing things to expand their minds instead.

Can you describe in 10 words or less the kind of career you've had? "Alice in Wonderland." I feel very fortunate...but it's been a wild ride.
